Scotia News for May

Well, the last newsletter seemed to go out without a hitch, so, as promised, here's the second installment of this month's news.

New Micro-Infantry

Yes, it's true! a Stonking range of new 1:300th scale infantry are being sculpted by the talented Michael Lovejoy for us, and the detail has to be seen to be believed. Just as well we have some photographs for you in the opposite column, then, eh?

The plan is to eventually get infantry for all the micro armour ranges sculpted to this level and released. The existing infantry models will still be produced, and available to buy as a range of budget infantry.

First into the breach are the WWII German infantry. The painted models are a German commander with two basic infantrymen to keep him company. Not that you can see it in this photo, but Jon risked his eyesight and sanity painting early war invasion markings on the helmets. Greens for Russian and US forces are also waiting to be moulded. There will be more details on them when the metal masters are produced. Plans are afoot to release new infantry models for every nationality currently covered in the Scotia Micro Armour range.

No official release date has been announced yet, but they are earmarked for a June release.

Current thinking is that the infantry will be sold as single sprues (5 models) for 50p, and in packs of 50 at a discounted price. We would also like to offer army packs, but with so many ways to game WWII out there, we're at a loss as to how to pack them. Maybe a full strength 1:1 historical formation, with no link to any rules systems would be the way to go? We'd value any input you would care to give us on this, so if you have something to suggest regarding micro army packs, please let us know at orders@scotiagrendel.com
